INTRODUCTION

33% people prefer living in a joint family after marriage, while 67% support the nuclear family setup. A joint family is one where two or more family units live together sharing a common living abode. This family system shares strongest bonds of affiliation, love and unity. However there are many cons of living in a joint family as well. People today no longer prefer to live in the joint family system. Smaller family units provide the freedom to live life as one pleases and the privacy is achieved-both of which cannot be possible under the joint family system. There are many disadvantages of joint family, but some major disadvantages include loss of privacy, financial responsibilities and interference in parenting.

LACK OF PRIVACY

Lack of privacy is a common complaint among people who live in a joint family. You are never alone. Everyone knows everything about all the members of the family and this leads to interference in daily matters. More often than not, this interference is not appreciated and people end up hiding things so that others mind their own business. You will always be surrounded by people and they will try to help you for your sake, but sometimes it gets too much. If a particular family member is called up frequently to shoulder responsibilities, it can lead to disharmony in married life.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES

In a joint family, it is about 'us'. When it comes to financial responsibility, usually, the head of the family handles financial matters while other members of the family contribute. However, many times it happens that the burden of 2 or more families is on the head of the family, and other members become idle and the burden on one person only increases. Contributions towards running the house and how the money should be spent is a major question in joint households. While everyone is expected to share money towards running the house, it is the head of the family who regulates the budgets and decides on how the money will be spent. Sometimes, the judgments taken by the head of the family may not go down well with some family members, leading to opposition and disagreement.

INTERFERENCE IN PARENTING

Living in a joint family sometimes deprives you of taking right decisions for your child. As a parent, you might not get to parent your child the way you want to, because there will be others in the house who will keep teaching you about what to do and what not to do. This may create hindrance in your style of parenting and ultimately it fuels your anger. For new parents, such intrusions can prove to be even more confusing and unsettling. Many adults with varying styles may bombard parents with direction on what to do and what not. There might be interference in almost everything related to childcare and upbringing.

CONCLUSION

To conclude, there are many disadvantages of joint family. Some major disadvantages include loss of privacy, financial responsibilities and interference in parenting. Indeed, joint family system is a misfit and has lost its relevance in the modern age. It is no longer possible to live in such a system, which is completely out of tune with the time, where there is emphasis on excellence and not consensus. Of course, living together is difficult because in a joint family you have to put someone else's needs before yours, you have to compromise but all these situations make you a better person.
